

North Carolina passes legislation requiring arts integration in teacher-prep

Aug 23, 2012

North Carolina Democratic Governor Bev Purdue recently signed a bill that includes a requirement that elementary teacher-prep programs educate their students on effective arts integration. As arts integration movements gain more and more attention, North Carolina is taking a major step in ensuring that their students receive quality educational opportunities that embrace the benefits of an arts-rich curriculum. Go North Carolina! Read Education Week's article for more details about this critical development in arts education policy:
